

The great secret of life is to cultivate the ability to appreciate the things you have, not compare them.

What does this statement mean to you?

Do you think it has value? If so why? Can you give an example one way or the other?

Are there areas in your life (personal or professional) where a heightened application of this principle (not comparing) would be helpful?
