

If you keep too busy learning the tricks of the trade, you may never learn the trade.

What does this statement mean to you?

How does this idea become even more important in today's workplace given the increase in production speed, increasing demands for better productivity , faster results and the complexity technology brings to make all this happen?

Who would you share this idea with and how would you advise that person to apply it?
